Lithuania's Heritage In The Spotlight

From historic photographs of the capital Vilnius, to 17th century maps, early literary works and traditional folk music, many of Lithuania's traditions and achievements are represented on Europeana - even more so with the recent addition of thousands of pictures and posters.

Among the 5,700 objects contributed by the regional Sela museum in Birzai, the collection of 19th and 20th century photographs is particularly interesting to browse through.

Hundreds of black and white images offer a window into the past. There are family portraits, the Smardone spa resort in 1937 - still a popular tourist destination - and favourite winter activities, such as ice sailing and skating on the Alyona river.

A 17th century engraving of Radvila castle and Birzai, created by famous cartographer Tomas Makovskis, is another historically significant object from the archives of the Sela museum.

"Some of the streets shown on the map still exist. Others have disappeared. However, the accuracy of map was proven by recent archeological excavations," says Juozas Markauskas, head of the digitisation department at DIZI Heritage - the organisation helping Lithuania's cultural institutions to digitise their collections.

Over 2,000 posters from the Lithuanian Theatre, Music and Cinema Museum have also been added to Europeana. The posters, printed in Polish and Russian, reflect key aspects of Lithuania's history, including a time when Lithuania was under the control of the Russian Empire and there was a ban on all Lithuanian publications printed in the Latin alphabet.

"The content of the 19th century posters also discloses the broad variety of multicultural links existing at the time in the European area," says Mr. Markauskas.

The posters advertise the many performances on offer to the citizens of Vilnius, including works by playwrights Shakespeare and Molière, German writer Goethe, French writer Dumas and Italian composers Rossini and Verdi.
